

A Nation Within Itself

As an America250MI History Grant Program Tier 2 awardee and Partner, Remus Area Historical Society (RAHS), on behalf of a collaboration of area organizations called the Remus-Mecosta Area America250MI Committee, is leading a community wide effort to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence adoption with a project called Preserving and exploring lessons learned from “A Nation Within Itself.”

The state grant, combined with local funds, will restore the 1905 Little River Schoolhouse, offer educational programming, host presentations that teach our melting pot story – a model of community members supporting one another – and offer a unique America250MI Colonial Social Gathering that celebrates freedom, democracy and equity. ### A Nation Within Itself

Our goal is to bring awareness to our unique melting-pot community within the broader story of Michigan and our nation's history. This story begins with Isaac Berry, Sr., born into slavery in Missouri, 1831. While working in his master's fields, Isaac met a neighboring girl named Lucy, who brought him water and read passages from the Bible to him.

As Jim Cross, great-grandson of Isaac and Lucy Berry, told the Pioneer newspaper in 2013, "Lucy and Isaac fell in love."

At the age of 27, Isaac escaped slavery on foot, following rivers and railroad tracks northward. Assisted by Underground Railroad families in southern Michigan, he eventually reached freedom in Canada. Lucy later traveled by rail to Detroit and crossed into Windsor, where she found Isaac after recognizing the sound of his violin being played in a tavern. The two married in 1860 and settled in Little River, Windsor, where they raised six children. Years later, Isaac and Lucy homesteaded in Mecosta County, Michigan, becoming part of a growing and integrated settlement community. By the turn of the century, Berry and fellow settlers realized that the presence of 10 families with children living within a four-square-mile area qualified them to establish a new school district. Isaac donated two acres in Section 16, known as the “school section,” for the construction of a new clapboard school named after the Berry family’s Canadian home community. Built in 1905 by neighboring families, Little River School served multi-racial children until 1935 and still stands in its original location today. According to Isaac’s great-grandson, Berry “was interested in helping children grow up to be upright citizens,” and the integrated community functioned as “a nation within itself,” where neighbors and students worked side by side and relied on one another to succeed. Their story reflects enduring lessons about the struggle for liberty, the opportunities created through perseverance and community, and the importance of preserving historic places that continue to draw descendants of the original “Old Settlers” back each year.
